Background

Partnership for the Poor? the Joint Africa-EU Strategy: Risks and opportunities

In December 2007, European and African heads of state and government adopted the Joint Africa-EU Strategy, which was to mark the beginning of a new political partnership at eye-level. The Final Declaration says that “We will develop this partnership of equals, based on the effective engagement of our societies, in order to achieve significant results in our fundamental commitments, namely: the attainment of the Millennium Development Goals.”

Since 2007, however, things have gone rather quiet on the Strategy, and it has received only little public attention. The international conference “Partnership for the Poor” is aimed at taking stock two years after its adoption. In what way has it been of any use to the poor so far? What risks and opportunities does the Joint EU-Africa Strategy bear when it comes to combating poverty? Are changes of direction necessary in politics? What is the role of civil society in Africa and Europe?

The focus will be on the topics of Governance and Gender, Sustainable Energy for Africa’s Development, and Regional Integration and Trade.

African and European representatives from the fields of politics, business and civil society have been invited.

The Conference is being organised in co-operation with the European umbrella organisation CONCORD and Deutsche Welle.

10:15 a.m. Panel I Local Power and Women's Rights: Potentials and Constraints of Decentralization for Gender Equality

In the context of development co-operation, strengthening local decision-makers is assuming ever greater importance. The aim is to contribute to Good Governance and, ultimately, to poverty alleviation via decentralisation processes. This raises the issue of what effects decentralisation processes are having on gender justice: For women in particular continue to be excluded from many political decision-making processes and affected by social and economic imbalances.

What opportunities does the transfer of decision-making powers to the local level now have regarding the codetermination of women? What contribution can the Africa-EU Strategy make in this context? Can positive experience at national level, for example in Rwanda in Central Africa, where women account for 56 percent of the parliamentarians, be transferred to local governance? On the other hand, how can the emergence of new inequalities be avoided at local level? What role do political measures such as the introduction of a fixed proportion of women play? And what role can civil society and non-governmental organisations play in this context?

12:15 a.m. Lunch

13:15 p.m. Panel II Ways out of the Fossil Dead-End: Sustainable Energy for Africa

Access to affordable, modern energy supply services is a prerequisite for development and for combating poverty. In most African countries, traditional biomass continues to be the main source of energy, sometimes accounting for 90 percent or even more. In many places, consumption has long outstripped what can be re-grown. Except for in a handful of oil-exporting countries, fossil fuels need to be imported at high prices. Spending on crude oil imports has begun to cause new foreign debt. The need to overcome the disastrous dependence on traditional biomass and crude oil imports, neither of which is economically or ecologically sustainable, is obvious.

But what does the alternative look like? Decentralised solutions for rural electrification appear to be well-suited to combat poverty. However, they are unattractive for commercial investors, who mainly tend to take an interest in large-scale projects such as biofuels plantations or "Desertec". But such ventures are chiefly aimed at creating energy for export purposes. Does Africa need both? Has the Africa-EU Energy Partnership set the right priorities to promote sustainable energy for Africa's development?

15:15 p.m. Coffee Break

15:45 p.m. Panel III Get modern or get out: How can Trade, Regional Integration and Infrastructure Contribute to Poverty Eradication?

More than 80 percent of Africa's poor live in rural areas. A large proportion of them work in informal economy. With its people-centred approach, the Africa-EU Strategy can hardly avoid attributing a key role to the issue of agriculture. Nevertheless, promoting rural development is a merely peripheral issue in the Partnership on Trade, Regional Integration and Infrastructure. The Partnership has above opted for export and further trade liberalisation. The negotiations on the Economic Partnership Agreements are explicitly excluded, although they are currently having far-reaching negative impacts on regional integration.

What is needed to boost rural development in Africa? How can the promotion of infrastructure integrate local communities more effectively? With what measures can inter-African trade be enhanced?

Statement:

Malcolm Damon, Economic Justice Network, Republic of South Africa
